

Background

TransUnion is committed to the security and protection of consumer personal information. As a part of this commitment, TransUnion has teams that are continuously engaged in proactively monitoring, safeguarding and investigating questionable activity related to access to consumer information.

As a result of this ongoing monitoring and investigating, TransUnion teams flagged suspicious activity related to attempts to access certain credit files and consumer accounts for TransUnion products. Our team's initial assessment indicated that while the security of TransUnion's systems was not compromised, unauthorized actors may have used personal information obtained from non-TransUnion sources to impersonate consumers and attempt to access TransUnion products and services.

After identifying the suspicious activity, we conducted an in-depth investigation into this matter to determine if, and to what extent, personal information was viewed. We concluded our extensive examination into this matter on October 26, 2022, and although we have confirmed that the security of TransUnion's systems was not compromised, we do suspect that personal information, obtained from non-TransUnion sources, was used to access certain TransUnion products sometime between January 16, 2022 and July 15, 2022. Our investigation determined that a total of 213 individuals, including 3 Maine residents, were impacted.

The personal information involved varied, but included individual's names in addition to: Social Security number, date of birth, financial account numbers, and driver's license number. Not all data elements were involved for all individuals.

What We Are Doing

TransUnion takes the protection of personal information seriously, which is why we engage in robust, proactive security measures such as cyber-intelligence investigations. As soon as we discovered the incident, we engaged in a dual-track effort to implement technical measures to block access to our services to potential unauthorized actors, and also to identify and notify individuals whose personal information we believe was accessed by unauthorized actors. We continue to enhance our security controls as appropriate to minimize the risk of any similar incident in the future.

On November 7, 2022, we notified impacted individuals, in the form of the letter attached, so that they can take additional measures to protect their personal information should they wish to do so. As a further precaution, we have arranged to offer complimentary identity theft protection and credit monitoring services to those impacted consumers. Please note that as TransUnion continues to refine our proactive security measures and cyber-intelligence investigations process, we anticipate a periodic practice of notifying consumers and state regulators of similar impersonation events going forward.
